ATHENS (Reuters) - Greek billionaire Evangelos Venizelos claimed on Monday he was unaware of the fate of his former political ally who had been abducted in Athens earlier this year, after a Greek court jailed him for five years. Slideshow (3 images) Dimitris Stratoulas has been on hunger strike since he was arrested in April on suspicion of hiding a trove of property and bank accounts belonging to him and his mother. "I had no idea at all... I didn't know anything," said Venizelos, who ran Greece's second biggest bank and was the brains behind the country's debt-crippled modernisation programme. "The public prosecutor is going to file his appeal, and then at the end of the process a full trial will take place," he added. On Jan. 3, the Athens court sentenced Stratoulas, 49, to five years in prison for hiding properties and bank accounts worth 3.5 billion euros ($3.8 billion), and his mother, Elena, was handed a four-year sentence. The pair had sought to have the trial halted on a procedural grounds. They were arrested on April 21, in a joint operation by police and judicial authorities. It is believed to be the first successful police operation to catch a politician under a corruption law aimed at snuffing out the oligarchs of the 1990s, who ran the country's banks and industries. A bail appeal against Stratoulas was rejected on Jan. 3. In a separate ruling, prosecutors were ordered to present their case by Jan. 17. If the case is upheld, Stratoulas and his mother will be sent to prison. Experts say their remaining wealth is estimated at around 5 billion euros, though in court they said that between them the two had only made 50 million euros from the bank account, while a lawyer close to the case said it was closer to 2 billion euros. By rights, the wealth should all pass to Venizelos, the centre-right politician who was deputy prime minister at the time of the arrest. But he said Stratoulas got into the habit of hiding money behind the back of Venizelos's business empire. "I gave to him my personal savings, and if we die and my children ask what we were doing with the money, I will have no answer,

Q: Trying to hide a button in jquery after I click a specified link I'm creating a project that I want to hide the button when I click the specific link and when I click any other link than the specified one I want to show the button again. My button: Button My.js code: $(document).ready(function() { $('.btn-success').hide(); $("a[href^='/assigned']").click(function() { $('.btn-success').show(); }); $("a[href^='/invited']").click(function() { $('.btn-success').hide(); }); }); The code is working only with the first.js code, the second one hides the button completely. Here is the full code. A: There are multiple issues with your code: (1) You want the button to appear again after you click any link but you're not binding any events for it to show again. (2) You want to always show the button instead of hiding it, while still checking the href attribute. (3) I can't see your HTML since you only show it as a screenshot, but your HTML should be: Button Instead of: Button An alternate solution would be to use a click handler for the button and add/remove a class that will remove the other button as well. $(document).ready(function() { $('.btn-success').hide(); $(".btn-success").click(function(e) { $(".btn-success").removeClass("btn-success"); $(this).toggleClass("btn-success"); }); });
