Who is Rockwood Mortgage? Rockwood Mortgage can be referred to as a mortgage broker, although the term can have a very misleading implication. In Australia, a conventional mortgage is usually acquired through a lender, or mortgage broker. The lender assesses the borrower's needs in detail and then offers a loan to the borrower. The borrower then makes a competitive offer on the loan and generally receives the funding. The lender pays a commission for arranging the loan. Most of the time the mortgage broker is not involved in the actual loan process. The mortgage broker is given a packet of information about the loan from the lender, then finds the borrower a finance product that meets their needs. The mortgage broker may encourage the borrower to make a competitive bid on the loan and may receive a commission for arranging the loan. Mortgage brokers usually are not registered under the Corporations Act (2001) and are usually in business with one or more borrowers. In Australia, banks and credit unions are required to give financial services to the public. All of these financial services are regulated by the relevant regulatory authority, such as the Australian Securities and Investments Commission. The criteria for approval, such as that the bank is authorised to do banking business in Australia, are generally stated in the company regulations. Mortgage brokers do not normally hold an Australian financial services licence (Financial Services Guide). This licence is only required if the mortgage broker becomes a 0cc13bf012
