Pneumococcal vaccine and sudden infant death syndrome. To evaluate the association between pneumococcal conjugate vaccine (PCV-7) and sudden infant death syndrome (SIDS). Retrospective case-control study. All infants younger than 1 year with sudden death confirmed by the Minnesota Child Death Review Committee and born in Minnesota between 1996 and 2000 were reviewed. Cases and controls were matched on date of birth. A retrospective review of the death certificates of these cases and a contemporaneous review of the medical records of a control group of children with an established diagnosis of acute viral upper respiratory infection, hospitalized with confirmed acute gastroenteritis, identified by International Classification of Diseases codes for viral infection, were used for comparison of exposure to PCV-7. Odds ratio (OR) of SIDS after PCV-7 vaccination, adjusted for potential confounding variables using conditional logistic regression. Among the 76 infants with SIDS, 63 (83%) had no known history of receiving PCV-7 and 10 (13%) had a documented history of vaccination with PCV-7. Among 256 children with acute viral illness, 226 (88%) had no history of PCV-7. The OR of SIDS was 2.1

(95% confidence interval [CI] 0.5-10.1) among PCV-7-vaccinated infants younger than 1 year and 3.4 (95% CI 1.0-17.0) among control PCV-7-unvaccinated children. There was no relationship between PCV-7-vaccination and SIDS among children who were otherwise healthy. These results indicate that the vaccination with PCV-7 was not associated with SIDS in this population of children. Further studies are needed to evaluate long-term safety of PCV-7 in young children.
