Cocaine is associated with cognitive problems, such as performance deficits on neuropsychological tests, and decreased academic performance. These deficits appear to be short-lived, but little is known about the long-term consequences. In the present study, we examined the cognitive consequences of cocaine use in cocaine abusers who have discontinued use. Twenty-five cocaine abusers were tested for cocaine use in 1992 and 1994 and, at the time of the study, were abstinent for at least 1 year. We reassessed the cocaine-abusing group at approximately 6 years follow-up in 1998 to determine if cognitive deficits existed at this longer term follow-up. To minimize drug-related effects, we assessed the cocaine abusers on a drug-free day, with urine tests and urinalyses to confirm abstinence. To further minimize drug-related effects, we assessed IQ, performance on a language test, and performance on a memory test. The cocaine-abusing group had significantly lower IQ, language test, and memory test scores at baseline compared to a demographically matched control group. There were no significant changes in the cocaine-abusing group on any of the cognitive tests between baseline and follow-up. These data suggest that cognitive deficits associated with cocaine abuse appear to be short-lived and disappear over time.Nenad Stojić Nenad Stojić (; born 27 January 1990) is a Serbian footballer who plays as a midfielder for FK Loznica in the Premier League of Bosnia and Herzegovina. Our new show will document the conversations in my head - the weird thoughts going through your head while you're trying to think about something else. We figured the best way to get your earholes would be to go straight to my head. To kick off the series, I sit down with my brother-in-law, JD, who has taken up horror-thriller writing and has just published the first in a new series called The Walking Dead. We talk about what it's like writing for TV and doing a horror novel. We also talk about our love of comics and how we hope to create a horror comic. We talked at length about the various horror games we've been playing recently as well, and how we think the balance between playing a game and playing with the expectation that the game will kill you is a delicate one to navigate. For the full audio of that conversation, check out the episode on the In Our Head website or hit the link below: Videos]]>
