So.2d 916 (Fla.2002). In this case, the State did not offer direct evidence as to what occurred in petitioner's former home while he was present, but did introduce evidence that petitioner had told both Powell and McDonald that he had killed someone. The evidence also showed that when petitioner left the former home he was carrying a shoe box, which contained a bullet and crack cocaine. See Riehl v. State, 660 So.2d 678 (Fla.1995) (holding that even though defendant did not testify, where the defendant and State presented evidence on the issue of intent and the State admitted the defendant told authorities that defendant had not intended to kill the victim, evidence was legally sufficient to sustain his conviction for premeditated murder). With respect to the conspiracy charge, the record reveals that the State did not introduce any evidence that petitioner was the initiator of a conspiracy. However, the State presented evidence that petitioner had agreed to drive to the former residence, to help dispose of the body, and that he did help dispose of the body after he killed the victim. See Asay v. State, 769 So.2d 974 (Fla.2000) (holding that whether a conspiracy was proven beyond a reasonable doubt is determined by the nature of the agreement that is established and the testimony, or other evidence, that is adduced at trial). Based on this evidence, the jury could have reasonably inferred that petitioner agreed to dispose of the body together with Powell and McDonald. See id. at 978. Accordingly, this Court concludes that the trial court correctly found that the evidence was legally sufficient to support the convictions for premeditated murder and conspiracy. See id. at 977. Petitioner also challenges the trial court's written order denying petitioner's motion for postconviction relief, arguing that the order is deficient because it does not specifically address the issue of newly discovered evidence. This Court has previously held that the trial court's failure to make specific findings on postconviction claims does not render the court's order deficient where the court's oral ruling on the claims is sufficient. See Johnson v. State, 927 So.2d 1053, 1054 (Fla. 4th DCA 2006). In the instant case, the trial court held that the newly discovered evidence was insufficient to support a new trial because the evidence was relevant and material only to the issues of competency and ineffective assistance of counsel. The trial court further found that it would be a "futile exercise

Other examples of shemozzle include: Mop-up, from a shemozzle Category: Military slang and jargon Category: Military aviation Category: Military occupations Category: Types of collisions Category: Aviation colloquialisms Category: English words Retained ureter: a potential life-threatening sequela in a patient with chronic renal insufficiency. A patient with a history of chronic renal insufficiency was sent to the emergency department with complaints of abdominal pain and hematuria. The patient did not have urine in his back, and initial urinalysis was positive for blood. Ultrasound demonstrated a contrast medium in the urinary bladder. Subsequent cystoscopy showed a retained ureter in the bladder. Transurethral ureteroscopy was attempted, but the patient had severe back pain and hematuria, and an anesthesia consultation was obtained. A discussion of the risks and benefits of the procedure versus the patient's condition was held. The decision was made to proceed with a delayed transurethral ureteroscopy. The patient underwent the procedure without complication; however, when the pathology report showed distal ureteral necrosis, the decision was made to proceed with ureteroneocystostomy. The patient underwent the procedure with a good outcome. The potential serious consequences from retained ureter are discussed. Q: Parsing HTML with BeautifulSoup returns dict of dicts I've had a hard time determining the cause of this problem, so I'm using Google to ask for help. So, I'm trying to get some html from a website, parse it, and then get some information out of it, but BeautifulSoup is parsing the HTML as a dict of dicts. I'm not sure why. The code: `import requests from bs4 import BeautifulSoup import re url = " params = {'n': 1, 'fn': 'all'} data = requests.`
