Surgery for colon cancer: a report on the American College of Surgeons' National Surgical Quality Improvement Program. The American College of Surgeons' National Surgical Quality Improvement Program (ACS NSQIP) is a collaborative project that develops and implements surgical risk adjustment models to improve the quality of surgical care. The ACS NSQIP comprises a hospital-based program that gathers data on over one million surgical patients every year. To learn more about the impact of perioperative factors, pain, and suboptimal care on the outcomes of patients undergoing colon cancer surgery. The ACS NSQIP Patient-Level dataset from 2007, 2008, and 2010 was used to examine predictors of short-term outcomes in patients undergoing colectomy for colon cancer. Q: What is the difference between using preposition vs. not using it? Are there any examples where using the preposition "a" makes the sentence better, stronger, or has a different meaning than using the preposition "in"? Example: I was in a car accident, but didn't have a scratch on me. versus: I was in a car accident, but didn't have a scratch on me. Example 2: He was in school for a year. versus: He was in school for a year. A: Difference, meaning and usage is not so hard to discern. Prepositions are words that attach to other words. The word preposition is typically used to attach to a noun, which is not the case here. "I was in a car accident" means you went to a specific place, and were in contact with a car. You were not the car. That is why the sentence would be better with the preposition "in". "I was in a car accident" does not convey information about who/what went with the car. "I was in a car accident" has the implication of someone being the driver of that car. "He was in school for a year" says nothing about where he was when he was in school. The preposition "in" may be used to convey that information, i.e. "He was in school for a year in a kindergarten" or "He was in school for a year in the hall of a school". So, as you can see, the preposition "in" should be used more often than not.
