You are Jerome Turnblatt. You are a Cat-Detective. You are me. You are on your way from Sunny City to City X to make an investigation. You are thirsty and probably, you didn't have breakfast before your trip. No worries. You have a lemon and you take a drink. But then, who is this stranger? The wet night seemed dark and that was bothering you. Also a cat started talking to you and he invited you for a walk. Now you don't have so much energy but the night is clear now. You are in a city called City X with a vast police city. An old police dog was asleep before you got here. Maybe he will let you sleep in his apartment. Maybe he will invite you to breakfast. You are not sure but it is a good place to rest and feed yourself before a long trip. Hey, You're a cat, so you can jump high. Do you see that? The door is open. Just a few more and you could rest for some time. You didn't even knew a murder had happened here. A lot of citizens are in the streets and they are looking for their loved ones. But a stranger came here and you just got here. The dog wakes up and thanks you. Good. You're welcome. You have to go to the police station to make some investigations. And this is the way to the police station. HEY! There's a cat in here. The door was so locked from outside. You have to make a good investigation to find the right guy behind that. But you will have to get some information about that first. HEY! A little help from a detective. You are so thirsty now. The things you do to discover things. And there's a microphone in the street. You are on an exclusive mission now to make this thing go. Let's go back to the first city and get more facts about the situation. Maybe that's a clue about the murder of the Mayor? HEY! There's a cat. The mayor must have died as a suicide. The rain started. It was a big deal. That's what you know. Hey, I found something. Well, the office is in the right direction. The police

What's new in This Rain Will Never End - Noir Adventure Detective:

tale Good insight. This also explains why the new Tesla car battery tech can drop the charge and ready in a minute. And have faster charge than the Nissan Leaf. And the shift to EVs won't happen overnight. Or any where near. It will be a long haul. Quote: Originally Posted by P-Mint I have been thinking about driving Fords and Nissans for ages. I like most of the vehicles you list. Except I prefer Fords, too. For off-road, it is nice to have a truck able to handle anything. And the big Ford F-250 is a great vehicle. It is pretty much rock solid, whether you are towing something or are just plain driving around in the winter mountains. I did not like it when it stopped being available. Quote: Originally Posted by P-Mint I also like driving in the rain. It is just fun. I like stopping to get out and walk in the mud sometimes. That is one reason I feel so compelled to go for walks now. Just walking in the rain makes me feel alive. It is a big part of what I appreciate being out there. It is not bad to go on a long walk. But some things are best done in the company of others. You were just fine walking along in the mud and wet. But needing to take shelter and a restroom every couple of hours - or even requiring water every few hours - is another matter. I can see having had a pitfall if a dangerous one, and not just a cool clambake and a good mud fight. I mean when that 55 year old fella takes a quick bath and walks out the door wet "never be the same".It is common nowadays to carry various tools and instruments in a tool bag or fanny pack. In fact, men have adopted fanny packs as a replacement for a conventional pocket or jacket pocket. When using a fanny pack, the user must reach inside the bag, dig through the contents, and pull them out. Sometimes the contents are fragile, such as an intricate silver pendant, and the fragile items may be damaged if "mixed with" other contents. Furthermore, the contents when retrieved may
