I have tried using below code. var slider1 = Ti.UI.createSlider(); slider1.minimum = 1; slider1.maximum = 100; slider1.value = 50; view1.add(slider1); var slider2 = Ti.UI.createSlider(); slider2.minimum = 5; slider2.maximum = 50; slider2.value = 100; view2.add(slider2); But both are shown, with different position values. But i want both to be shown side by side. A: The problem is because the properties that you are setting are all the same. So you can actually nest the objects under each other, and give each of them different properties. This is what i think you are trying to accomplish... var slider1 = Ti.UI.createSlider(); slider1.minimum = 1; slider1.maximum = 100; slider1.value = 50; view1.add(slider1); var slider2 = Ti.UI.createSlider(); slider2.minimum = 5; slider2.maximum = 50; slider2.value = 100; view2.add(slider2); view2.add(view1); The recent paper ([@bib1]) in "The Lancet", "Integrative, community-based health care for adults with chronic conditions in rural

Role of the free sulfhydryl groups. In chloroplasts of cyanobacteria, the cytochrome c extrusion from photosynthetic thylakoids is regulated by the redox potential of photosynthetic electron transport. At low photon fluences the photosynthetic electron transport is oxidized to a high redox potential in the light, which is able to reduce low molecular weight molecules in vivo, including the electron carrier plastocyanin. Plastocyanin inhibits cytochrome c export in vivo, probably by preventing electron transport to the Rieske iron-sulfur protein. However, the low molecular weight peptides and small organic anions, in addition to plastocyanin, are able to inhibit cytochrome c export from photosynthetic thylakoids in vitro. The reason why thylakoids contain a redox-dependent mechanism for cytochrome c export is not clear. We have studied the effect of cytoplasmic redox potential on cytochrome c export from thylakoids isolated from Chlorella vulgaris in vitro, using cytochrome c of several electrophoretic mobilities. Cyanide treatment, which reverses all thylakoid redox potentials, is accompanied by dissociation of the cytochrome c extracted from the thylakoids, irrespective of its electrophoretic mobility. When the redox potential of thylakoid lumen is increased from the valence +1 to the valence +2 using DCMU, cytochrome c of higher electrophoretic mobilities is less dissociated.
