The present invention relates to a liquid material supply method for supplying a liquid material in a desired position and, particularly, to a supply method of a treatment liquid such as an etching liquid, a developing liquid or a plating liquid. A method of supplying a liquid material to a processing liquid by using a tank in which the liquid material is sealed is well known in, for example, the development of manufacturing apparatus such as an etching apparatus, a developing apparatus and a plating apparatus, wherein each processing liquid must be supplied in a desired position for an exact purpose. For example, it is widely known that in the developing apparatus, a processing liquid is supplied in a desired position on the whole face of a material to be developed such as a printing sheet, thereby performing the developing work. In the apparatus of this kind, a material to be developed is immersed in a processing liquid, and the processing liquid containing the material to be developed thus generated is taken out of the developing apparatus so as to be used for development. When the material to be developed is immersed in the processing liquid for development, it is required to have a sufficient contact time with the processing liquid and stabilize the thickness of the processing liquid in a surrounding area of the material to be developed during the immersion process. Therefore, a developing unit is constructed such that a tank in which the processing liquid is sealed is moved in a processing liquid supply direction to take out the processing liquid, and a liquid material supply unit in which the material to be developed is moved along the processing liquid supply direction, thereby supplying the processing liquid having a uniform processing liquid film thickness. In the case of a tank, the processing liquid is supplied only by operating a pump, and the residual amount of the processing liquid is a little in the tank. Accordingly, the processing liquid is supplied in a desired position of the tank in the following manner. A frame member for stopping the movement of the material to be developed is provided, and the frame member is positioned so that the material to be developed contacts the frame member. Then, the movement of the material to be developed is stopped, and the material to be developed is brought into contact with the frame member. Thereafter, the sealing of the tank is opened by operating a valve, and the material to be
