One of the most popular free plugins for After Effects in the early days was unmult by Knoll Light Factory. It was a utility plugin that was used for keying... but it had one important parameter called "fading". When using fading, the lighting must move within it. This was done in such a way that even when changing the scale it was impossible to avoid the movement of light. Therefore, if you want the lighting to be stationary, then you need to turn off the fading function. If you like effects like this, then you may not be happy with what Knoll Light Factory provides. So I started looking for an alternative.
